The Practice

This is a short extract from the novel "Matilda" by Roald Dahl, describing an extraordinary girl.

Fill one suitable word into each gap. The first one has been done for you.

Matilda found the house empty as usual. Her father was not yet _____ from work, her mother was _____ yet back from bingo and her _____ might be anywhere. She went straight _____ the living-room and opened the drawer _____ the sideboard where she knew her father kept a _____ of cigars. She took one _____ and carried it up to her bedroom and _____ herself in.

Now for the practice, she told _____. It's going to be tough but I'm determined to do it.

Her plan for helping Miss Honey was beginning to form beautifully in her mind. She had it now in almost every detail, but in the end it all depended _____ her being able to do one _____ special thing with her eye-power. She knew she wouldn't manage it right away, but _____ felt fairly confident that with a great deal of practice and effort, she would _____ in the end. The cigar was important. It was perhaps a bit thicker _____ she would have liked, but the weight was about _____. It would be fine for practising with.

There was a small dressing-table in Matilda's _____ with her hairbrush and comb on it and two library _____. She cleared these things to one _____ and laid the cigar down in the _____ of the dressing-table. Then she walked away and _____ on the end of her bed. She was now _____ ten feet from the cigar.

She _____ to concentrate, and very _____ this time she felt the electricity beginning to flow behind her eyes, and her eyes _____ hot and millions of tiny invisible hands began pushing out like sparks towards the cigar. "Move!" she whispered, and to her _____, almost at once, the cigar rolled away across the top of the dressing-table and _____ on to the carpet.

Matilda had enjoyed that. It was lovely doing it. It had felt as though sparks were going round and round inside her head and flashing out of her eyes. It had given her a sense of power that was almost supernatural. And how quick it had been this time! How simple!
